I have a API endpoint that returns the User token, and then I use the Laravel Mix/Validation package to perform user validation before sending the request to the API. The problem that I'm facing is how can I perform JWT validation when the JWT is expired. For instance, let's say I retrieve user token like so: return JWTAuth::attempt($credentials)->setCredentials($credentials)->setApiKey($key); I would like to validate this token using the JWTAuth package, but since the token was never set (or expired) before, the JWTAuth package doesn't know how to validate. Is there a way for me to perform JWT validation in my API, even if the token is expired? I have searched the documentation and the internet, but couldn't find anything. Thanks in advance. A: I have found a possible solution for the problem: Return a raw string with the expiration date, and then when in the front-end application, use it to check if the token has expired or not. //... $token = JWTAuth::fromUser($user)->authenticate(); $date = Carbon::now()->addMinutes(3); // A number that I used to determine how long the token is valid, 3 minutes. return JWTA
